AspenTech Aspenone v8.0 DVD1.[The management of high-risk adenomas at the IR-CMUCH Basse-Normandie-Site]. The American Society of Gastrointestinal Endoscopy recently recommended that high-risk adenomas should be resected in order to improve the rate of advanced adenomas and colorectal cancer (CRC) detection. The best strategy to integrate endoscopic therapy into the follow-up of patients with high-risk adenomas has not yet been defined. We carried out a randomized trial aimed at comparing the efficacy of surveillance and early treatment of high-risk adenomas, assessed in terms of advanced adenoma detection, advanced adenoma resection, change in adenoma size, and CRC detection. Patients with high-risk adenomas were enrolled in a prospective randomized trial. Adenoma size and location, previous adenoma resection, risk of malignancy and endoscopic findings were recorded. Patients were followed-up by colonoscopy and by telephone at 6 and 12 months and then annually. Fifty-seven patients were included in the trial. During surveillance, the resection of advanced adenomas was 12% and advanced adenomas were detected in 34% of patients. No significant difference in advanced adenoma detection and advanced adenoma resection between early treatment and surveillance was observed. When endoscopic therapies were carried out, size and number of advanced adenomas did not differ and the colorectal cancer detection rate was 12.5% in the early treatment group and 11.3% in the surveillance group. In the surveillance group, advanced adenoma detection and advanced adenoma resection rates were slightly lower than in the early treatment group. Although this study shows that an endoscopic treatment of high-risk adenomas is not justified, a short interval follow-up after endoscopic therapies could be sufficient.
