Inhaled tree and grass pollens induce respiratory allergy in sensitized individuals, while dust from house mites, moulds, and animal fur can elicit a similar allergic response. However, only a subset of patients with allergen-induced asthma are allergic to common indoor allergens. In contrast, indoor allergy to airborne allergens is not well documented. Wood dust exposure has been associated with respiratory symptoms and asthma in both children and adults, with most studies focusing on sensitization to the main wood allergens, 4-hydroxy-3-methoxybenzaldehyde (HMBA) and 4-hydroxy-3-methoxycinnamaldehyde (HMC). Exposure to wood is usually associated with wood-related asthmatic symptoms, whereas exposure to other indoor allergens is usually associated with asthmatic symptoms with a more diverse array of respiratory disorders. A large proportion of the allergic population is either not sensitized or has lost the capacity to generate allergic response after allergen exposure. The immune system in non-sensitized subjects appears to be in an 'immunological quiescent' state, and the 'sensitized but tolerant' state is characterized by attenuated IgE response with IgE/IgG1 dominance, and different T cell cytokine patterns. Thus, wood dust exposure may be a risk factor for asthma in susceptible individuals. In these patients, short-term exposure might trigger asthma exacerbation by promoting a Th2-driven response, and long-term exposure might downregulate the asthmatic response, perhaps due to induction of regulatory T cells or tolerance.Q: How can I specify multiple browser branches in Ghost? My single Ghost site is for both desktop and mobile browsers, using the default theme. I'd like to be able to specify a Ghost branch with something like Is that possible, or do I have to setup two Ghost sites, one for desktop and one for mobile? Thanks. A: It's not currently possible in Ghost v0.4.4 - here's a feature request on the Ghost GitHub page. UPDATE: I created this plugin, which provides several styling hooks that allow you to specify various branches of your site. These styling hooks are
