This invention relates generally to the storage, retrieval, and identification of data to which one or more persons have access. More particularly, the invention relates to a system for controlling access to personal data such as financial account numbers, customer numbers, and the like. The present invention has particular utility in controlling access to personal data stored in a computer system. The invention will be discussed in the context of storing financial data, but is equally applicable to storage of other sensitive, personal data such as patient records, social security numbers, credit card numbers, debit card numbers, and the like. Presently available computerized systems for storing and retrieving financial data are limited. A typical account information system will have a personal access control program (PACP) to limit access to account information to only those persons who have been expressly authorized to have access to such information. For example, a user may have a small number of employees, but is authorized to allow any employee who needs access to specific account information to do so. Employees who do not need access to specific account information are restricted from having such access. A disadvantage of existing systems is that account numbers and other unique identifiers are generally not protected from piracy and unauthorized access. Another disadvantage of existing systems is that because the data is accessible to a large number of users it is susceptible to theft or loss by an outsider who has obtained unauthorized access to the data. It is an object of the invention to provide a system for controlling access to data. The system should be general purpose and not limited to storing financial data and should be able to protect and distinguish between data used by a small number of people and other data not accessible to such a limited number of people. It is another object of the invention to provide an access control system which limits access to only those authorized by a system administrator. It is a further object of the invention to provide a system which can recognize and protect against multiple attempts to access data. The invention accordingly comprises a system possessing the features, properties, and the relation of elements which are exemplified in the following detailed disclosure. The scope of the invention will be indicated in the claims. The coming year is shaping up to be a great time to be a Pats fan. It's not like there's much to prove, anyway. The Pats are in the AFC Championship Game for the fourth straight season, winning the conference title for the eighth time in the last nine years and the sixth time in the last seven years. And they did it behind offensive mastermind Tom Brady.

{.671} Homeland Security (click to enlarge) Remember last year when the Department of Homeland Security began to implement one of its most intrusive, tyrannical regimes? The report that the heartless monster Gene “Tequila” Cordero sent all the millions of American citizens in to a government database under the veil of national security had plenty of Americans on edge. Well, the monster returned in his hideous form, dangling the federal government’s threat of imprisonment and execution from the ceiling of the town hall, but this time with the steel fist of truth to back him up. Gene Cordero roared to life on August 12, 2013, emerging from the shadow of his sheepish predecessor, Lois Lerner. This time, he unleashed a stream of verbal venom in the rich northeastern timber, revealing the evil plans of Obama’s regime when he intimated that Washington DC will become a gulag in the near future. If we had been tired of the deception, the high-handed methods of intimidation, and the anti-American and democratic offenses, we may have been able to appreciate the importance of Gene Cordero’s statement. Gene spent the first part of his appearance slamming the chair he was sitting in and making an inflammatory remark about the “tyranny” that the federal government was enforcing. He was talking about the National Defense Authorization Act of 2012 or NDAA, an act that has been responsible for many Americans being illegally detained without charges by the FBI and Homeland Security. Cordero was referring to the NDAA’s section 1031, where Senator John McCain inserted language that not only expanded the terrorist act of pre-emptive prosecution, but also provided for continued prosecution of American citizens who may have committed such acts, plus adding the ability of the federal government to strip American citizens of their Constitutional rights. “
